

from the Kiowa camps, having had quite a satisfactory interview with the chiefs of that tribe, and had been gone a week this morning. They were treated with the utmost kindness. Lone Wolf and his wife removed everything from their lodge, and gave them possession of it during their stay, which was two nights and one day, then escorted them the whole distance back to the Agency. From their description the country over which they travelled is greatly diversified with mountains, hills, valleys, cañons, and plains.

While at the camp some of their young men advocated making captives of them, in order to procure the discharge of Satanta; but the chiefs were opposed to any such measure, as being a breach of hospitality, and would not permit it to be attempted. Guadalupe made a speech to them in the council, in which he told them that when he was a young man, he was foolish like them, — went on the war-path, — took scalps, — which the Kiowas knew to their sorrow, — but had now entered upon another and better road, was travelling in it, and would not leave it to go back to their old ways.

The buffalo, deer, and antelope would soon be gone, and he wanted to learn how to raise cattle and corn, that he might have something to eat when the buffalo could no more be found; — with much more to the same effect, adding that he wanted to see all the Indians entering upon the same road; for it is a better way to travel than their old ways.

Guadalupe speaks in a serious, calm, and cool manner,

dian

chi-
for
out
the
edi-
fore
the
tely
ine.
she
hen
the
and,
and
cov-
in
ted
cir-
tion
in
od.
the
em
me
elf.
ard

