from the guarded corral under the guns of Fr Hill; which daring exphoit had rendered his name famous with this tribe Throw This time he allached thinself to the friendly element of the tribe, & was ever after a warm friend of mine The next morning while the men from the Agency were in my tent, several chiefs ware Cheefs same in Mhite Borse came & scated highself by me & hounting to to John Butter the teacher of The Agency School exclaimed (Dexanna (Dexan) I answerted Thankuna; Mode gave avery serutinging look at J. D. whose long hair, heard. & wide brimmed slouch hat, bore poslight resemblance to the typical texand exclaimed No! Dehannat no good - Steal homes - no and proceeded, in advance of the tribe, to the place of our next encampment, on the South Fork of Cache Creek, perhaps twenty-five miles from the Agency. After raising my tent, a part of the tribe arrived, and encamped near by. This morning the Agency men and team returned, and in the afternoon, Kicking Bird and his people came, and put up their lodges around and near my tent.

It is astonishing in what an incredibly short time the whole aspect of a portion of country may be changed by these people. At noon to-day, except a few lodges upon the opposite side of the creek, though higher up and scarcely visible, my tent was the only indication of the proximity of human beings. The whole beautiful valley of Cache Creek was a solitude, from the mountains to the Agency. Presently a long, dark line is seen coming over the ridge which bounds the valley on the north, and in less than an hour the solitary vale is teeming with life and activity - both sides of the creek being dotted with human habitations for nearly a mile in extent, in which are living several hundred of these wild people, each chief surrounded by his own band. Their lodges are so simple, and so easily taken down and reconstructed, that one may be in a camp at breakfast, - everything moving along in the usual manner; presently the ponies and mules are driven in, and the whole village is transferred to their backs and is gone, leaving little to mark its former site.

Again, as in the experience of to-day, a wild and solitary place is selected for a camping-ground. In the