

head ornaments appropriate to their standing.

The feature of the occasion, was, much autumn leaves of various colors were used as bodily adornment.

Sitting Bull was a special figure at the dance, for he was a personal friend of Chief Running Antelope, who had the pow-wow in his charge. He was requested by Running Antelope to make the opening address of welcome to the distinguished visitors. Running Antelope was the special interpreter.

Sitting Bull said: Dear friends; You are today our guests at this pow-wow. In the former times, you and us foolishly shed much blood-between us-because we did not take the time to understand each other. The Great Mysterious has chosen this day for you and us to come together, forget our past differences and extend our right hand of friendship to each and every one here present. How kola! Our fights are all over. Let us be what the Great Mysterious wishes us to be. You and us are of the same blood and should be living together, not as mere friends but relatives.

Heretofore, all our past troubles have been caused simply because, though of the same blood - we talk a different tongue. Henceforth, you and us are going to follow a new road of living and it is going to be hard at first but the younger generation should
