

reached the place a party of 'minute-warriors' rushed forward from the camp in defense. They shot promiscuously in the dusk and Sitting Bull was shot in the wrist. The other members of the party succeeded getting the horses and one of them -- Kanginonpa, Two Crows caught a well broke horse and took it to Sitting Bull, who mounted quickly and succeeded getting away in safety before the Crows had arrived.

The Sioux made a clean get-away with nearly fifty head of Crow horses. One of the warriors dug up herb and root medicine, dressed Sitting Bull's wound. He was the only one wounded in that dangerous undertaking.

When they reached home the old timers said, "Sitting Bull surely has the endurance of a buffalo bull experiencing all kinds of hardships on the war-path.
