

They rather applauded him for his daring offer. He galloped up, then made his horse run on a full speed and dashed along the enemy's line in the thickest of bullets fixed on him. He succeeded getting through > He was wounded on the right foot.

Both sides lost about half their numbers though the Sioux were mostly wounded. The Flatheads were driven off toward North.

When the Sioux warrior got back to the camp a big victory celebration was given and Sitting Bull was decorated again, but this time, with a red feather indicating wounded on battle-field. He was again declared a young hero.

This entitled Sitting Bull, the honor of wearing a red feather as head ornament.