order. Cody was taken in charge by the officers of the 8th Cavalry, who, by relays, kept him at the officers' club in a maudlin condition until the next morning, when he demanded a conveyance to take him out to Sitting Bull's camp, some 40 miles away on Grand River. McLaughlin said he knew Bull was in bad humor, and that not even Cody would have any influence with him, and he would probably leave his scalp there if he went out. Cody started, with a horse and buggy and a driver, and the details of how they put it over on him so that he never reached Bull's camp, are very amusing. It sure makes an interesting chapter. This is absolutely straight. This officer who gave me the facts was on the "reception committee" that entertained Cody, and yet lives here.

I will have to have the photo made of White Bull. Will send a couple of separate views and you can take your pick. They will cost a dollar each.

Sincerely yours,

E. A. Brininstool
