My dear Dr. Campbell:

I wrote you hurriedly yesterday because my office duties were very pressing and I may have sent you by ~~express material~~ that you do not care for and that would be of no use to you. The picture I sent you of the large boulder is the boulder that the Daughters of the American Revolution of Nebraska dedicated and is as near ~~the~~ the camp of the drawing of the treaty of 1851 as possible. The Horse Creek overruns the exact site where this treaty was held and it has been placed on the boulder that so many feet north or east or whatever it might be that the treaty of 1851 was held. I interviewed some of my students that lived at Scott's Bluffs which is not so far from the site and they said that it would not be difficult to get to this boulder or near it with a car. All they said you would need to do would be to ask people.

I am wondering if you got up so near as Horse Creek that you might pay me a visit in Laramie. We might be of mutual help. I shall be in my office all summer trying to whip into shape with two old timers both over ninety years of age a book on the telegraph in Wyoming. This will be profusely illustrated by the artist, Mr. William H. Jackson who is now in New York City, having been in Wyoming and over the Oregon Trail.

to
if possible

Now in the "Chronicles of Oklahoma, Volume II, number 2, June, 1924, you will find on page 111 a picture of a peace council. I fancy that in a way this would be similar to the one held at the mouth of Horse Creek although I think too many white people dominate in the picture above referred to. In this paper you will find a picture of Governor A. A. Taylor on page 101 who was interviewed by one of my research workers in the writing of "Sacajawea." Mr. Taylor was out at Fort Bridger at the time the great peace council was perfected with Washakie in 1869.

Please let me help you if I can.

Respectfully yours
