

May 4, 1935.

Mr. Gottfried Hotz,
Zurich, Seminarstrasse. 97,
Switzerland.

Dear Mr. Hotz:

I was happy to get your letter. I am glad you like my new book.

I was glad to see your drawing of the medicine-bundle. It looks very interesting. It is similar to that I have, which contains Sitting Bull's weather-charm. But the two are not identical.

I wish I could provide you with a copy of the bundle I have, made by an Indian. However, that is not at present practicable. There are no Indians in this town, and it would be hard to find the true colors and materials. I cannot go to the Indians myself, and naturally would not let anyone take the bundle away from my house.

Perhaps some time I can oblige you. But not now. For I shall be going out of the Plains country to the mountains within a few days.

Next autumn, perhaps I could manage to have a good copy made. How much would it be worth to you. That is, what would you pay? I have to go to considerable expense to go to the homes of the Indians and get a copy made, while I stay there to guard my bundle. Please let me know.

Yours very truly,

W.S. CAMPBELL
("STANLEY VESTAL")