Dear Mr. Campbell:

Suddenly I doubted to have written to you after your kind answer of May 4. At all events I will write once more the sketch I made at that time with aid of the dictionary. It seems that my miserable English creat misunderstandings. It would naturally bee to expansive, making a copy of the bundle which you propose me so oblingly. A bundle I have , but no contents for it.

I would have been happy to receive a yard of unbleaek ched muslin, dyed orange yellow, painted with the green dragonfly, the two horizontal black lines and the elk. I think now, because only a copy it is not necessary that it would be made from an Indian, now as I see, it would cost more than I thought. Here in Europe we imagine erroneously to stay west of the Missouri and thereto in Oklahoma would mean almost to be neighbor of Indians. It is a pity that Mr. Weygold is so far of Oklahoma, because he ~~could~~ is expert to undertake such a copy, as he copied buffalo-robos and would probably not have ^{been} refusing to make it. He is very pleasing and my Indian collection would be poor enough without his kindness. I think he would have been glad to see such a precious rarity and would have treated it with all care. But as he stay to far of you, anybody able to paint, could also do it, if it is possible to reach a precise copy for some dollars.

It will be harder to get a calamus root, a white deer tail and wristlets of buffalo hide, on which I must surely renounce. If in some years I would arrange an exposition of my collection, these things would be a valuable object-material speaking of magic practices.
