of mind of Hospital Steward Ntkel. In going into position over ery rough ground thegun was overturned and the harness broken, so that the animal drawing it becamedetached. Steward Nickel, a man of exceptional physical strength coming up with the Red Cross anbulance, seeing theplight the gun wastn, seated himself on the bottom of theambulance, bracing his feet

Page 186 against the tail gate, too a good grip with his hands on the shafts, told his driver to go ahead, and in thie way dragged the gun up to the line.

The shellfrom the gun had the desired effect and a white flag was seen displayed from the house. Slocum and Steele, with theirmen dismounted, advanced directly on the house. Crowfier, with "G" troop, was ordered to move along the crest and protect the rightflank of the dismounted line. Brooks threw a few shells into the timber, also against the party which had been on our gith right front, but was now moving rapidly into the valley. As Slocum's line approached the house the police came out and joined it. The line was pushed into the timber, dismountedgeing the few shostiles who remained. I now caused the dismounted line to fall back to the vicinity of the house, pickets being left at the farthest point gained by the advance. All the hostiles having disappeared, Crowder was recalled.

I had moved with the dismounted line and in passing the house had noticed Sitting Bull's bidy lying ong the ground. On returning, when the administration advance fell back, I saw the evidences of a most desperate encounter. In front of the house, and within a radius of fifty yards, were the bodies of eight dead Indians, including that of Sitting Bull, and two dead horses. In the house were four dead policemen and three wounded, two mortally. To add to the horror of the scene the squaws of Sitting Bull, who were in a smallhouse nearby, kept up a wailing. I at conce began to investigate the causes which brought about the tragedy. The inquiry showed that the police entered the house about 5:59 A M and arrested SB