It was in Wyoming, some Apaches all walked into a lake and disappeared under water. Two Apache boys who were late came to the edge of the lake, and saw a dog running back and forth on the beach, whining and lonesome, but afraid to go into the water. They could hear singing and drumming under the lake where the people went.

When the buffalo disappeared from the plains, four medicine men led the people to a cave in the north (Wind Cave?). They went into the cave and came out, one bringing corn, one bringing meat, one bringing medicine, and one bringing (tobacco?). They said the whole multitude ate what they brought out and they all went back into the cave. (Loaves and fishes?)
