

Sitting Bull on way to surrender to "the tender protection of one of our Indian agents" ~~is~~ "hardly surprising that he prefers the payrolls of Uncle Sam to those of H. M."

"His surrender marks the end of the Indian wars on a large scale, since it is extremely improbable that the aborigines, no matter how bitter or how resentful they may be, will ever again find a leader of his courage, audacity and skill from a military point of view. Sitting Bull has been an Indian fighter and commander of the very highest type, and his place in the story of our Indians wars is as assured as that of Tecumseh."
