

story of his generalship and bravery, sometimes even saying Sitting Bull was an educated general a West Point student. They traveled all over the south at different places. In the south he was hooted and hissed at. In New York he got acquainted with good friends. He met and talked with Edison. There he listened to the talking machine, which he thot was a most wonderful thing he saw the Madison square gardens was on Staten Island saw the Godess of Liberty illumined at night, saw the thousand ships in port in the New York harbor, the wonderful sky scrapers, was in Philadelphia shook hands with Wanamaker, was in Washington visited the capitol. Any way Cody combed the country with his show didn't miss anything. It had b en a wonderful success financially. Mr. McLaughlin was enthused. Cody planned to cross the ocean the following year, taking for granted that Sitting Bull would go. Mr. McLaughlin was engaged as interpreter. The trip was planned. The following year when Cody came to Standing Rock Sitting Bull refused to go, no coaxing, persuasion nor hiring would budge him. He had seen enough he said let somebody else go I am not going, so that ended Mr. McLaughlin's brilliant dreams of traveling in Europe. She couldn't forgiv him for this disappointment. She was bitter against him, influenced her husband Mr. McLaughlin. McLaughlin denied him all priveleges after this, bitterness grew on both sides that never ended.

Gall and John Grass were the pets after this. They were lauded and extolled made much off by the Agent and his wife. Sitting Bull was belittled. Stories were told of what a coward he was. Indians that wanted to get into the good graces of the Agent packed stories back and forth. So many stories were brought to Sitting Bull that once he likened the Agent to a petty jealous woman and it got back to the agent which made matters worse of course. Cody refused to substitute he would not take Gall or John Grass so the trip was posponed. From this time Sitting Bull was called a medicine man, his chieftainship was denied. They enen told that he was never in many
