

four council men these decided what laws should be enforced.

The books try to say that Sitting was just a medicine man and not a chief or a warrior. The books say that John Grass and Gall were the big chiefs and the big warriors. Now, if I could get some true stories showing that Gll and John Grass were medicine men sometimes, that would help a lot to correct these books.

Can you find out any stories about Gall making medicine, making prayers, or dancing, or leading any ceremonies at any time? Did he ever doctor people or horses? I would like to know when and where these things happened. Sitting Bull was a great warrior, he fought nearly all the time to hold the land Tetons owned. No one ever knew John Grass to defend his country. He was a Blackfoot and was always on the Missouri receiving rations. Gall was the one of the soldiers of Sitting Bull's command a "White Crow" band he never distinguished himself only at Ft. Berthold when he was attacked and wounded by soldiers when he was in the Custer battle but did not command Sitting Bull was the war leader at that time he had the sacred war bonnet a talisman.

It would help to get stories of the same kind about John Grass. If we can show that he made medicine and cured the sick or any other things like that, then we can correct these stories. I want true stories, and when and where they happened.

And as the war leaders had the medicine mans charm. The supposed power really belonged to the medicine man. It was as tho he blessed an article and it was carried by those who went to war. Sitting Bull had one at one time. A talisman. Any one could have one of these made if he could pay enough to the medicine man. Any article can be blessed by the medicine man. Sitting Bull had his war bonnet blessed but he himself was not a medicine man. He was a warrior he never professed to be a medicine man, never held a spirit lodge. Gall was a government made chief. He was not
