Dear Professor:

Concerning the agreement you suggest with regard to my illustrations your book, I think it is sufficient if you promise to try a reasonable number of times to see the ms. with my illustrations. A course, which I suppose you would take, even without any explicit agreement.

A more difficult question is, how I am to make the illustrations without having seen the text, especially since there may be many details in your descriptions of events, characters etc. which I might not show in my illustrations owing to my ignorance of the text. We may get around that difficulty by letting you see my sketches for your criticism before I get them into final shape.

I have not made any pen-drawings for quite a long while (several years). I have since developed writer's cramp and don't know whether my hand will stand the strain of drawing much with the pen. If it should prove impossible to make
