ted. I shall look up a few books in the library that have been so illustrated (I think of one by Thompson Seton) & shall then make further proposals or suggestions concerning the matter.

I concur fully with your opinion that a book on Indians needs, more than any other, numerous illustrations because the subject, especially in its physical aspect, is so far removed from the knowledge & experience of the average reader, even here in America.

If you come across any illustrated material, photos or other reliable information about the viable part of the life you want to describe (costumes, camps, arms etc. etc.) please let me know about it, also typical landscapes perhaps in magazine illustrations, amateur snapshots etc. which give me an idea of that phase of the subject.

For the first, please let me know what tribe comes into question, also about when the book is to be published. (If there is no urgent reason for special hurry, try to find out when the manuscript & illustrations must be ready for publication for the Christmas trade).

Yours very truly
over! Frederick Weggold.
