Dear Mr. Weygold:-

I have your letter containing the sketch for the coremony of the Calumet Dange. I think it admirable, and can readily edapt my story to fit. I am sure that it would be better not to hurry this thing, even though it may make it later than we plaumed. The sale of the book will depend largely upon the excellence of the illustrations and the vividness and reality of the story. Therefore it would be fatal to havry too much. I suggest that you take all the time mescassary and I will do the like.

I had an opportunity to talk with burgess Johnson, a professor in Vassar, and formerly an editor and a worker in editorial capacity for years. I talked over our book with him and asked what he thought of the thing and of the publisher with whom I have been corresponding. He encouraged we about the book and said that, if it were possible to get some company to see that it would go as outside reading in a school course, it should be profitable. He said that the publisher with whom I have been corresponding ideal/fiel issued some very good books (as I already know). But he said the publisher usually made his contract in such a way that the authors bere a large part of the expense of publication. I am just now in no position to enter into such a contract. I suppose you would not care to enter it wither. I told him as such and he gave no the manes of a number of publishers for visca he could vouch and who might give more favorable terms. I shall write to them at once and find out what they will do, without breaking off with the former publishers I mentioned.

Of course, it may be that he would not implied an such a contract at all. But I was glad to get this information, insemuch as I had not been able to get anything definite from him as to terms, in case the book met his approval. In all my letters he is very encouraging, but rather non-committal, as I told you.

I have shown my if to one or two good judges and your illustratons for CHIYESA, and they have all been such interested and pleased. I have faith that, if we take time to do this thing properly, we cannot fail to make a success. I will enquire of the publishers to whom I write asking the latest possible date when the book must be in their hands. I will also write again to the publisher with whom I have been corresponding.

I am glad you like my revised chapters. By this time you will have chapters 3 & 5. I am sorry the first drafts are of no use to you. I will revise chapters 4 & 6 and send you the completed text before long. After this I shall not trouble you with the rough outlines.

Your elegestions will be carefully considered. A glass eye in a horse is a white, glassy looking eyeball, found in pintes rather often. It is a term commonly used in horse literat re and on the plains, I believe. I used the sorm Voice of the night to indicate the fact that the insects make me sound which never displays any individual voices, but continues as though a bu one tireless crattre.
