

but I think the process was rather unconscious or subconscious.

I would express your sentence on p. 8. something like this:

"Years of life among the wonders of nature had given the old man etc..."

This chapter⁽⁸⁾ is perhaps the finest in the book & one of the finest things I have ever read of Indian life outside the pages of Francis Parkman (especially in the "Oregon Trail").

I shall send sketches of illustrations for the last chapters as soon as I have them ready.

Yours very truly

Fredrick Weigold.

P.S. The use of the term "Karepy Hunting Grounds" for the hereafter in the last sentence of the story is somewhat out of harmony with the ethnographic exactness of the rest of the story. Might this term not create a prejudice against the book in the minds of the
