According to this, the wording would be as follows:

Is this right, or do you want the second name (Stanley) also to appear in full? I find that this is frequently done, though

I don't know whether it is the rule. It seems to be general practice not to use the word "by" before the name of the author on the outer cover.

Please give me precise directions regarding all this in your next letter.

Awaiting with interest further information, also concerning the new book, I remain yours very truly

Frederick Weygold.

P.S. Don't let yourself be hampered in any way in the selection of myths by the possibility ^{or impossibility} of finding a decorative art for each culture area but make your selection without regard to the illustrations.

If I don't find a decorative art suitable for certain culture areas, I shall find means of getting around the difficulty by either taking designs from the nearest neighboring area or by conventionalizing ^{myself} forms of nature (animals or plants) from that area.
