Dear Campbell:

Mr. Hotz, the Swiss schoolteacher who has translated H.H.G. into German, writes me that he has found a publisher who is willing to publish the story in book-form, provided that Mr. Hotz is satisfied with a royalty of $12\frac{1}{2}\%$ and that he (Mr. Hotz) satisfies from this royalty the claims of the authors and of the publisher of the English original.

Carnahan suggests about ten percent for himself and the two authors, the latter to get six percent, so that Mr. Hotz would send ten per cent in all to this country (to Carnahan who would send three per cent to each one of us), Mr. Hotz keeping $2\frac{1}{2}\%$ for himself.

Accounts are to be settled yearly.

Please let me know what you think of this arrangement or what else you propose.

Carnahan will not send the plates for the illustrations because he does not think it worth his time and effort to do so but gives the Swiss publisher permission to reproduce the illustrations from the English original of the book.

Hoping to hear from you as soon as you come to a conclusion in this matter, yours cordially,

Frederick Weygold
