Dear Sir:

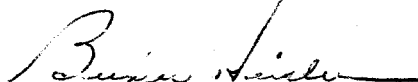

My husband and I are at this time reading your "Warpath and Council Fires", and are enjoying it as thoroughly as we did "Kit Carson", "Sitting Bull", and others of your books that we have read.

I am writing you because of certain questions that came to mind as we read, questions that perhaps you with your knowledge of Indians and Indian ways can answer. How did the Indians break their ponies to ride? Did they use any kind of saddle for those first wild rides? And, without lariats, or fences, or corrals, how did they catch a wild pony anyhow?

Any information along this line that you find time to send along this way will be greatly appreciated by us. Or, maybe there is some book dealing with such details that you could recommend to us.

Again, I should like to express our appreciation for this latest work of yours---this "little mirror of ourselves and of our government at work in international affairs".

Sincerely yours,

Mrs. Bert E. Heisler
