

police promptly put down his rebellion and restored order with the result that no crimes were committed on the reservation in that year. The police in this agency were under George Sword, a warrior who took this name when he became a Christian and adopted the white man's rule. Speaking of his company says, "Their services have become invaluable and I should regard it as impossible to maintain peace and order, surrounded as we are by settlers and located sixty miles from military aid." Another agent says of his force, "They are perfect ferrets after criminals."
