

smokes it. If the tribal war party is going out they use the tribal pipe. If a man didn't have a pipe he would pray without a pipe. If a man has no pipe there is another way by which they offer tobacco. They raise it up and tie it on a stick. Sometimes they would stick it up on a mountain or hill and this was just the same as if they offered it with a pipe. SB's pipe had a red bowl.

death? Bear's Rib was one of the minor chiefs of the Standing Rock reservation at the time SB was there but he was never with SB. He was with the friendly Indians.

B Then ~~white~~ people made a lot of SB and this made minor chiefs like John Grass, Two Bears, Fire Heart and perhaps Gall jealous and they were then against SB. If they had not been they would have avoided much trouble. Running Antelope always was a friend of SB.

GALL

Indians do not think him higher than SB but he was estimated pretty high on account of his accomplishments as a warrior. He was more of a warrior than SB but probably just acting under his orders. There was no quarrel between Gall and SB.

Some people didn't care to go way off for a buffalo hunt or something like that but others like SB liked to go far away. Many joined SB but not necessarily to fight, just for hunting expeditions. For some reason there was a bitter hatred between Crows and Sioux. Had it not been for the Custer fight the Crows would have been wiped out completely.

At one celebration of Custer anniversary they displayed Curley and said he was the only survivor of the Custer fight. One man hollered, "Take him away, take him away! He's a coward." A Crow standing by said he hadn't even been in the Custer fight but had slipped off to keep out of it.

Lone Man was in camp with SB when Father De Smet came out to Powder River. One Bull and Fox say there was quite a royal reception for the priest. ~~Two~~ <sup>ff</sup> men were selected to take out buffalo robes. When he was about one mile from camp these two were with the other scouts and when he arrived he was placed on the buffalo robes. They took him into SB's tent to see him. They smoked the peace pipe, signifying that
