

man was a soldier or scout. His name was, (I think, Crow Dog. He took charge of the woman and punished Crawler. After that incident he was no longer entitled to a seat in the old men's circles. It was a blemish during the rest of his life. Whenever a man violates anything the soldiers who were provided with tomahawks, sometimes made of stone and sometimes just a piece of ash wood, a sort of club- - -. With this they keep order if anything wrong is done. Crow Dog had one of these long clubs. When he learned of Crawler's behavior Crow Dog took his club and clubbed Crawler and rescued the woman. In the first place Cralwer refused to give her up. There were → so many rescue parties for this woman that it was confusing. John Grass told me that a certain white captive was in the hands of a certain band of the Sioux, his father's band. His scouts went out and gave some horses to the holdiers of the captive of this woman and brought them to John Grasses's home. The Indians had dressed her up to return her to her people. Some band came and asked Grass's band to go and get this woman. There was quite a tumult among old-timers over the capture and rescue. John Grass and several others were involved in it. There is a certain party used to visit John Grass. They often mentioned a certain white woman in the tribe. John Grass seemed to know all about her.
