

Crow Dog who killed Spotted Tail would be considered justified in doing so - not considered a murderer.

Never heard of SB having a fight with anyone except on the warpath. Of course, fights often occurred, but one of SB's requirements as a chief was to be at peace all the time.

In the winter Indians would camp in a place where there was shelter, generally where there was timber for a wind break. The Huncpapa would camp either along the Grand or Missouri River. They also spent a lot of time around the Black Hills. If they were hunting and couldn't get back they would be around the Yellowstone or Powder rivers. In the summer they liked the Rocky Mountain country. Hunting place generally between Little Mo, river and Power River. The Sioux had their choice about staying in Dakota or coming here to Indian Territory. The Huncpapa refused to consider that proposition.

In olden times the Cheyenne tribe was the wealthiest. They had more horses than the Sioux. Whenever a Sioux has good horses or a good wagon or <sup>is</sup> well-equipped for traveling they would say, "That man is like a Cheyenne." The northern Cheyennes on the ~~Reindeer~~ are poor. They say the Osages used to be poor in early days. When they traveled they would go on foot. They deny that. They say they always had plenty of horses - more than they cared for.

PICTURE OF SB ADDRESSING A COUNCIL AT FORT YATES - 1889 -
Place where they had a great commotion. McLaughlin, <sup>A</sup>Cook = governor from Bismarck. The council lasted nearly a week. Chiefs all sitting at one end. Hairy Ch~~ick~~, a Yanctonai. A lot of the old men still wore the Indian costume at this time. There was an order at one time out for the Indians to cut their hair. This was after SB was