

World's Fair had SB's cabin. Ought to be able to get a picture of it.

AD

They had some tents outside and there were several tents nearby belonging to some of his immediate friends. They had already sent White Bird and Red Bear to saddle SB's white horse. They helped each other. He was willing to go and was dressing when Crow Foot called him a coward, that he had always said he was brave and now he was going to go with the police. So he changed his mind. Up until that time he was willing to go. After he said he wasn't going the police took him by the arm. There were not anything like 150 of SB's followers. It was getting cold and some of the people had gone home. The Ghost Dancers came out when they brought SB out. His followers had been awaiting a chance in case he should need their help. He didn't call on them for help. It was his followers who stirred up trouble. They said, "You are Indian police, and now you are here." While they were talking like this Lone Man and others tried to stop them. Catch-the-Bear tried to fire into Lone Man, so the latter jerked the gun from his hand and killed him with the butt of the gun. Never heard that Bull Head fired the first shot. He was the first policeman that fired after SB was already shot. Six policemen killed. Never heard that the women attacked the police. Lone Man described how certain policemen got killed: Little Eagle and Armstrong. Grand River was on the south. The timber was between the river and cabin. The Ghost Dancers ran away through the timber. Right on the bluff behind the trees some of the Ghost Dancers were still firing so the policemen went into some nearby sheds and into the house. From the house and from the sheds they were firing at the Ghost Dancers after SB was killed. It was getting daylight by that time. It seems that several policemen were lying down on the ground firing. One of the Ghost Dancers fired and hit either
