

theory of fabric designing. This knowledge, together with the Indians' own ideas (which are secured from the Indians themselves and from traders on the Indian Reservations throughout the United States) is responsible for the popularity of Pendleton Robes.

Color
Combinations

Special attention is given to color harmony from the view point of the Red Man, and his ideas are always welcomed.

BEING BUT FOUR MILES FROM THE UMATILLA INDIAN AGENCY, the Mills are in close touch with the Indians themselves. Through visiting Indians, ideas from the various Reservations and different localities are secured.

The Pendleton
Indian Robe

Is a soft, fleecy robe, measuring 60 by 70 inches, and weighs about four pounds. They have been given the name of "The Wild Indian's Overcoat" by a traveler, after seeing them on so many Indians throughout the United States.

The Pendleton Woolen Mills ship these robes in bale lots to nearly every Indian reservation in the