

Dick, one idea you may want to kick around for maximum roundtable participation is use of the Economic Summit model. The President elicited maximum participation at the Economic summit changing the people sitting at the table every couple of hours. Each group would consist of about a dozen or so folks, each individual would make short presentations, there would be a short exchange between the President, his cabinet and the group then that group would leave and another dozen or so people would come forward. I don't know how that would work, particularly in view of the fact that the President will probably only be there for a short period of time but I thought I would share that idea with you.

Let me or Pam know how we can help.

cc: Alan Parker