

- B.) Next, a steady series of news releases would blanket targeted as well as national wire service locations, depending on the hard news item. releases should include the announcement of each tribe's intention to attend the gathering, news of agenda items, guest speakers, special entertainment, issue statements, etc.
- C.) The utilization of network morning shows (GMA, Today, CBS This Morning) for Chief Mankiller to explain the council gathering, its objective, history, and purpose in 1993.
- D.) The use of CNN feature programs such as Christie Brinkley's "Living in the 90's." Ms. Brinkley and camera crew would visit site of 1993 council and give historic perspective. She would tour site with Chief Mankiller and visit other significant locations around Talequah.
- E.) Begin, in March, a feature series (through the Native American Press Association), providing history of 1843 council with a focus on various aspects of the 1993 agenda items - what's the same and what's changed since the last council 150 years ago. This should appear in all Indian/Tribal newspapers as a consistent feature as regularly as paper is printed.
- F.) Develop a children's Art and Communication Exchange between the Native American Children of Canada, United States, Mexico, Central and South America, promoting educational and social interaction between Indigenous Children of the Americas. Each child would draw or paint a picture depicting some historic piece of the 1843 Gathering or something more contemporary regarding the 1993 Council. Accompanying each piece of art would be a letter from that child to one in another country, describing Native American life at home. The participating tribal leadership would coordinate the exchange with one another to insure all children are afforded the opportunity to participate and learn.
best describe the passing on of tradition to the next generation.
- G.) The budget you faxed to us indicates the need for brochures, posters, street banners, etc. Naturally, we agree and feel that distribution is key. Therefore, as materials become available, we will consider with you the appropriate and best use for the same.
