

realized. The policy of the government is to protect the rights of the Indian and teach him lessons of frugality, industry and thrift. His chief instructor must be the honest white man. He can sell a portion of his free estate and use the proceeds to improve and develop his homestead inheritance, which is wisely made inalienable. The plan of the government to industrialize and improve the Indian must be along the lines indicated by Governor Brown and the means, industry and intelligence of the white man is the most valuable asset in the accomplishment of this high aim and purpose.
