

STAR VINDICATOR

McAlester, Ind. Ter.
April 28, 1877
Vol. 4, No. 12
G. McPherson, Editor

EDITORIAL ON CHOCTAW NATION

The boundary line between the Choctaw Nation and Arkansas is now being run, and strange to say, after all these years of agitation regarding the matter, the Nation has no one present to represent her interests. By all means she should have had a practical surveyor to accompany the United States surveying party from the beginning to the end. How will the Choctaw Nation now have any assurance that the line will be correctly run? One would have supposed that after all this trouble and fuss the Nation would not have left everything to the honor of the United States authorities. The way it is now, the probability is there will be as much dissatisfaction after this line is established as there was before.

STAR VINDICATOR

McAlester, Ind. Ter.
April 28, 1877
Vol. 4, No. 12
G. McPherson, Editor

EDITORIAL ON CHOCTAW NATION

The boundary line between the Choctaw Nation and Arkansas is now being run, and strange to say, after all these years of agitation regarding the matter, the Nation has no one present to represent her interests. By all means she should have had a practical surveyor to accompany the United States surveying party from the beginning to the end. How will the Choctaw Nation now have any assurance that the line will be correctly run? One would have supposed that after all this trouble and fuss the Nation would not have left everything to the honor of the United States authorities. The way it is now, the probability is there will be as much dissatisfaction after this line is established as there was before.