

MINCO MINSTREL

Minco, Chickasaw Nation, I. T.,
Friday, February 28, 1896
Vol. 6 No. 35
L. N. Hornbeck, Editor

EDITORIAL ON CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW CLAIMS

A new turn has been given to the legal battle over the enormous fees for securing payment on the $3,000,000 claim of the Choctaws and Chickasaws. The case is pending in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. It was started a year ago by Harry Bacon of Oklahoma City, against D. M. Ross of Guthrie, on the claim that Ross had received $75,000 in fees and that one-third of it belonged to Bacon and one-third to Rob't Black of Guthrie. After Ross secured the money he located at Washington, and it became necessary to enter suit there.

The time in which testimony could be taken having passed Ross' attorneys insisted that the case be closed. Attorneys for Black, Brookshire and Yarrell put in an appearance and stated that they had recently been employed to look after his interests, and time had not been given them to take evidence. They had looked into the case and were satisfied that Ross had failed to carry out his part of the agreement.

MINCO MINSTREL

Minco, Chickasaw Nation, I. T.,
Friday, February 28, 1896
Vol. 6 No. 35
L. H. Hornbeck, Editor

EDITORIAL ON CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW CLAIMS

A new turn has been given to the legal battle over the enormous fees for securing payment on the $3,000,000 claim of the Choctaws and Chickasaws. The case is pending in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. It was started a year ago by Harry Bacon of Oklahoma City, against D. M. Ross of Guthrie, on the claim that Ross had received $75,000 in fees and that one-third of it belonged to Bacon and one-third to Rob't Black of Guthrie. After Ross secured the money he located at Washington, and it became necessary to enter suit there.

The time in which testimony could be taken having passed Ross' attorneys insisted that the case be closed. Attorneys for Black, Brookshire and Yarrell put in an appearance and stated that they had recently been employed to look after his interests, and time had not been given them to take evidence. They had looked into the case and were satisfied that Ross had failed to carry out his part of the agreement.