

THE INDIAN CITIZEN

Atoka, I. T.
Thursday, June 7, 1906
Volume 21, No. 4
Paul B. Smith, Editor

CHOCTAW GIRL IN NEW YORK

There is a pretty Choctaw girl among the exhibitors of fine poultry at the New York Poultry, Pigeon and Pet Stock association at Madison Square Garden. With a butcher's smock concealing a becoming dress, and a big pet Leghorn in her arms, she is one of the most attractive and picturesque sights of the big show.

She is Miss Sophia Pitchlynn, of Washington, D. C. Her father was Peter Pitchlynn, the Choctaw chieftain, spokesman for his tribe to Congress for 5 years, and described by Charles Dickens in his American notes as the best type of an American gentleman the great novelist met here. Chief Pitchlynn married a Washington woman, so Miss Sophia is really only half Indian.

She has some of the prettiest chickens at the show and she raised them in the back yard of her unpretentious home in Washington. -- N. Y. Journal.

THE INDIAN CITIZEN

Atoka, I. T.
Thursday, June 7, 1906
Volume 21, No. 4
Paul B. Smith, Editor

CHOCTAW GIRL IN NEW YORK

There is a pretty Choctaw girl among the exhibitors of fine poultry at the New York Poultry, Pigeon and Pet Stock association at Madison Square Garden. With a butcher's smock concealing a becoming dress, and a big pet Leghorn in her arms, she is one of the most attractive and picturesque sights of the big show.

She is Miss Sophia Pitchlynn, of Washington, D. C. Her father was Peter Pitchlynn, the Choctaw chieftain, spokesman for his tribe to Congress for 5 years, and described by Charles Dickens in his American notes as the best type of an American gentleman the great novelist met here. Chief Pitchlynn married a Washington woman, so Miss Sophia is really only half Indian.

She has some of the prettiest chickens at the show and she raised them in the back yard of her unpretentious home in Washington. -- N. Y. Journal.