

Charley Levi would come in. No, it wasn't (not clear) his mama could tell some, but--because she was there in that year and earlier days. She was--she would put up the first mail that come in now, I remember that. Papa was postmaster and she was assistant and she handled the first mail that went in the boxes.

(Well, they get a nice school there now and a nice church.)

Yeah, but I believe they're going to lose the school if they don't do something. I don't know what they're going to have to do.

(See like there's lots of children there, though.)

Yeah, I know. They come--they run a bus, you know, in every direction. Up towards Rocky Ford and up the creek and down the creek and over the flat. They have three routes that bring the kids in. Now right around there's lots of children, I guess. I--you know I haven't been down in there for a long time. I should. Last time I was there I went to a baptizing up at Rocky Ford. We went by there.

(That's something in the past--I guess, the old baptizing days.)

No, they still have it.

(They do!)

Yeah, they have 'em around here once in a while. They have protracted meetings then they get 'em down here on the creek--

(And have baptizing on the creek.)

Yeah. They baptize in the water, just in the stream, and they do up there, too. It's been always in warm weather, I don't know why, but when ever mama was baptized when I was a little kid, they broke the ice and baptized her.

(Well.)

Down on Crutcher Creek or Liberty--no Blackbird. So I don't know why they have to wait. It didn't give her a bad cold.

(I guess people were much healthier and hardier in those days.)
