

Yeah, all up and down the creek branches. Now this Bill England he was buried there. Anyhow he died way back yonder. He was buried before Joe was. He lived around Dodge. Anyhow that's what it was--lived around Dodge. They called it Elkton first.

(Elkton?)

It stationed on the railroad came, had post office and store there, blacksmith shop. Had a mill there and a elevator. (Much static--not clear)--back in north of Dodge. Dodge, you know, Dodge church house.

(Yeah.)

He lives in that house across there from Dodge, from the church house. Then up on the hill farther, you can look--used to look north of there and there's a cemetery back over there on a hill like. You can see it, I don't know what cemetery or whose it was or anything about it, but I remember passing there. You could see it from the road. First section line, you go north from the church house you turn east first house east Marshall Thompson lived there and the next house on the hill is Mrs. Blevens, Lena Blevens. She's my first wife's sister. She lives along out back. You could find out from house, that lady there, she's not there to tell you.

(Now he took me and showed me that old Houston Downing cemetery and, of course, there was only two markers or three markers there. And they were for the Starr children, but he went through there and showed me where every one of those graves was and he showed me sixteen of 'em. They were all about Downing family.)

I know about where that was, over on Whitewater wasn't it?

(Yeah.)

I remember that being there. I know there's one there. John Starr was buried there.

(Yeah, John Starr.)

John (name not clear).
