

It can be anything.

(--- or clothes, can't it?)

Yeah, if you wanted to give me that, if I was an Indian doctor, I'd have to take it.

(Un-huh, you have to take whatever the person gives you, don't you?)

Yeah.

(But they prefer not to take cash, don't they?)

But my cousin he charges--he charges money..

(Well, I went to one once that charged money.)

And they used to say that the medicine wouldn't work if you demanded money.

There's always a lot of people at his house.

(Well this one man I went to, he really didn't ask me for money but I knew he didn't have very much and I gave him money. So maybe it's alright if the person just gives it to you.)

Yeah, I think so. Whatever he wants to give but he isn't supposed to charge you know, so much for this and so much for that.

(But that was a little different. I had tobacco fixed that time. But for myself. It wasn't against somebody or anything like that. I don't believe in that. I don't believe in bad medicine ; I believe in good medicine.)

My Dad knows how to do that.

(Un-huh)

You know if it's tobacco, but he won't fix it anymore.

(Un-huh)

I don't know. I guess it does some good, I've never tried it.

(Yeah)

I know people have used it and say it's good but I've never tried it myself.

(Well, I'd have to say that time, maybe it was all in my mind, but my head-ache
