

are a few right here in Hominy, but the people like, nowadays, like everything else, you have to go to the city to make a living, and Indian people are more or less integrating with the white civilization and they have to take their place in line with everything else. That way, they find the old organization kind of in the background. I was kind of thinking too, it might be well to try to recruit some of these younger ladies too. I guess some of them just don't care to, for personal reasons, care to become members.)

Other posts have quite a few members. They seem to quite a few of the younger generation seem like they do very well and they don't always rely on the elderly, which that is right. I admire them a lot of times when I see the young ladies taking a hold, speak out. You see, they have education. They do these things much easier as older women. We don't have the education. Some of them can't read. Some of them can't see. Therefore, the young people would just fit in there right. They have an education, and they will-- would just know how to handle it more so I should think, but they don't do it. I don't know why, but they don't do that. It is that way in the state convention. We go up there. We just see the same--same old faces. But we are always glad to see one another. Seem like more new Indian members are coming in. They just don't like--I guess they don't like to be bothered. (Well, it ought to be like anything you do. You got to try harder and if you don't succeed one way, you have to try another way, you know, it just---) That is why we don't like to give up much. See, if we don't run it right, we don't run it like we should. We are going to lose our chapter. We are going to lose our charter if we don't organize right and have these meetings. So, therefore, it is all because it is hard to do but nobody else--I don't want to give up. I just don't. This organization is just wonderful for me.
