

what he thought. What he had in mind, as a young brave he was taught, he was advised, he was given instructions, and he carried them out like they should be carried out." That is the true tradition of a "Red Man" in our land. That is what they are, what the tradition is. Whenever it is given and advised and taught, to these fundamental way of life among the "Red Man." Those are the things we must, at all times, whenever we say that we are glad to do it, we must carry those things out, as like that young Cheyenne brave. But the thing is that you and I as we live this life, you and I must go on. And here is another incident that happened, somewhere, in the country of the canyons, Grand Canyons, I don't know where it is, I don't know if it was in the country of Arizona, New Mexico, or Colorado. But this is another true fact, true life story of another young brave. This is told to me by my grandfather, Chief Lone Wolf. That it happened when they were attacked.

SIDE TWO: CONTINUATION OF PART II SIDE A

This was a whole camp that was attacked and must have been a large, big ----- attack that was made. And as they were fleeing from this encampment. They know that this was rough country, they knowed that there were canyons that could not be crossed by animal or man. Well, as it was, they came upon one of these canyons and they didn't know that moment what to do to save their lives. Well, as they were preparing to find a place for their escape, one of the young braves said to the group, "I'm going to delay the enemy. And you must, by all means, to find this place as soon as you possibly can, because I cannot hold this enemy too long. I am going to do this for you people. I am going to sacrifice, and I am going to delay this enemy." And they found this place at a canyon, and they could make their escape, and that is the price that this young brave made. He paid for his life to save this large number of people from getting killed, just from sacrificing his own life, and he did so. And that maybe that is the reason we Kiowas still
