

Or you know if he could find one here in Tahlequah, that would make it real easy for both of us.

(It sure would.)

We just have one car. And the wages they pay out in the country, you know farm wages or something like that, that's not going to pay you know much money to live on.

(There's really not too much farm labor anymore anyway, is there?)

You know down where we live they have this big ranch.

(Un-huh)

It used to be the Bonner Ranch. It's the Tate Ranch now but he doesn't pay too much, either.

(What does he raise?)

Oh, mostly cattle.

(Oh a cattle ranch.)

CONCERNING CHEROKEE AMPITHEATRE

(Well Louella, this Cherokee village out here and the Ampitheatre and the Arts and Crafts Shop and all that, that the Cherokee tribe is putting in, isn't that going to furnish more jobs for the people, for the Cherokee people? So do you think that will help some?)

Some--probably, but not very much. I know I went out to the Cherokee restaurant last night for lunch and I didn't see one Indian working in there.

(You mean they have all white people working in there?)

Well as far as I could tell they were white. They might say they were Indian but they didn't look Indian to me. All these other places, I've not been to Arts and Crafts but there may be employing some, but it's going to be very few. But these other places, you know they're saying, "Well, we're going to employ Indians," but as far as I know they may be hiring one or two but most
