

a place in there that's got a kind of wash stand like and a dish pan, but it's big. And I've seen her take people with running sores and all kinds. And take 'em up there. She...well, first she take 'em. One side of that building was for sick people. Any Indian got sick they come to her, you know. And she'd keep 'em.

(Sounds like a hospital?)

GRANDMOTHER HAD UNUSUAL TREATMENTS

It's kind of like a hospital. And I noticed she'd take 'em up there. And I never seen 'em give 'em a bath of warm water. Now they could have but I didn't see any of them. And see that was all in brush. You couldn't see, fifteen foot. And it was all the buck brush and all kinds of brush in there. Well, the road run right there between me and you and that walnut trees right there, to go out this way. And right yonder what I'm talking about now, she'd take them over there and she'd bathe them in there. And of course she'd take some kind of herb and when she got through bathing them. She'd wash them down with those herbs and she'd cure those people.

(Well, you were telling me last night about one just recently that had one of those running sores, she on her for years.)

Yeah.

(And an Indian doctor that doctored her. Cured her up.)

I've seen her do miracle things in here. Just her doctorin'.

(Some of that not only worked in the old days is still working, isn't it?)

Yeah. A lot of it.

WICKLIFF BOYS - OUTLAWS

Used to be some big walnut trees there. Those Wickliffs was outlaws. Barks. I've seen them come there, they've cut those walnut trees out now. But I've seen before they cut 'em down. These bridle bits sticking in there. You know, they tie their horses, too. And things like that, you know, in those walnut trees. 'Bout every Sunday and Saturday,
