

was it cleared land?)

Yep. They had-oh- big stuff over--big farm--lot of it's growed up now.

(Yeah. Did they have a sawmill around here?)

No. No, they never had a sawmill. There's some timber, shady stuff.

Cut down it as grows out. They cut that in the summertimer when they're full of leaves, you know. That's how come they have such a big place.

And we used to raise lots of hogs in this country--lots of hogs.

(Yeah.)

We didn't get too much for our hogs at that time. There wasn't no market much. But my dad raised lots of hogs and had a tobacco patch. We had two or three hogs killings. He'd peddle meat out. You really could get more for your meat and lard than you would for live hog on foot.

(That's right.)

(Words not clear) brains, tear it down, (word not clear) blood. You get more for your hogs from your meat, and your lard. That way you can get when you sell the hog on foot.

(Back in the early days where did the Indians go fishing at? On the river?)

Way down the river. Where Watts is now.

(Yeah.)

Down there towards (words not clear)

FISHING IN EARLY DAYS

(I guess there was good fishing there?)

Oh yeah. You can catch fish poison with buckeye. One killing, you go same place and you kill just as much fish next day killing as you did day before.

(Well.)

(Yeah before. I wouldn't have nothing to do with destroying fish.

(No, it didn't hurt the fish. No, they come back alive again.)
