

You go to Stilwell you go to spend all day.

(Yeah. Well, your daddy was raised in this part of the country, wasn't he?)

Well I, no, I don't think he was. I don't remember just where he was raised. He was here since I was little.

(Yeah. Well, was your mother from this part of the country too?)

Well, partly. She was from over here around Grove.

(Yeah, around Grove. What was her maiden name, rather what family was she from?)

I know, but I can't think half the time.

(And Cohee that's an old time family alright.)

The first man by the name of Cohee. I think she married that fellow.

My grandad married her. He used to be a scout for wagon trains going to California.

(Well. That was your granddaddy.)

Yeah.

(And what was his name? Do you remember?)

That's what I was trying to think of, but I can't. I know it too, as good as I know my own. He had a (words not clear)

(He had a lot of experiences in his time, didn't he?)

Oh, did he! He killed several people.

(My goodness!)

Do you know the Millers?

(Uh-huh)

(Words not clear) know that old man Bill Miller.

(Yeah, I know them.)

(Conversation is inaudible at this point.)

(Yes sir, you sure watched it grow up and kind of helped it along too.)
