

(Boy, I bet he hated that the rest of his life.)

Maggie: Yeah, he didn't have nothing, you know, he said, he pay him back either--you know when he was down (not clear).

(Did he feel sorry?)

Maggie: Yes.

(Hooley) He didn't have nothing. He was just an old hillbilly.

Maggie: Yeah, Luke went up there after he come back from the hospital, you know, and talk to 'em. I don't know what he--

(Hooley) I stopped down there and talked to 'em.

(Maggie) Yeah, he did, too. We just pitch in a little money, you know and the church too pay the bill out, you know, hospital, you know. We didn't have much money here then oh, my folks, there just poor people.

(The Baptist church help pay it?)

Maggie: Uh-huh, yeah. That's how we start too, have the first leg, you know, you know. The one that wore out on him. All the church members pitched in, you know, the money to get his leg. Now he's working at the school house.

(Hooley) Superintendent of Hulbert school, now.

(Oh, Luke is down there?)

Maggie: Uh-huh, yeah.

(Uh-huh)

Maggie: He was asking about you the other day we stopped down there selling barley seed.

(Well, how's that new leg fittin him? (I helped him get that last year, you know.)

Maggie: He said, yeah, I'm so glad, but I never do see Faye though. You know, I told him you were going to school. He said you tell her when you see her many thanks. You know what she done for me I'm so happy about it and them shoes looks good on me after he put it on that foot. It was just
