

make enough rope with the height to come back down to the earth. So every morning this Sun would go hunting. And evening time comes she'll wait for her hide or what his kill. She'd get it and make rope. So one day she thought she had enough rope to reach back to the earth. But still it wasn't long enough. But anyway she tried to touch the ground. I don't know if she could have used about three more cowhides, they said. It didn't reach far enough down so the Sun, he was supposed to be the husband, come back was looking for her. And there was a place open there. He looked down there and she was hanging. Oh, I forgot, they had a little boy, I forgot that. But anyway she was hanging down and she was looking up wishing that her husband would come and pull her back up or cut the rope or something. While she was hanging there her husband was so mad he said, "Well, I didn't know she was going to do that or else I wouldn't have brought all those hides." So, my throat is getting dry. Barbara, get me some water.

(Irrelevant conversation in background.)

Well, he said, "I wonder how I can get my wife back." So he went round and round, up there to try to find a way but he found a little wagon. He must have had power to something. He told this wagon, he said, "I'm going to send you down this rope, you go down this rope, go straight down and hit that woman but jump over the little baby that we've had." That they had. Said, "Jump over it and let that lady fall down." So that's what he did. He sent this wagon down. That wagon went right straight down and missed that little baby. And then it was like a swing, I guess. It swing just like a swing or a rope broke. They landed on the ground. They were quite a bit from the ground but the baby hit the ground and the wife got killed. So, it was inside of a fence somewhere and this, her little baby would go every morning, go and nurse while she was dead. He'd nurse on his mother, mother.
