

there was, he got to the river he said, "Now how am I going to get across without drowning." And another man came by and says, "Well, now your aunt is coming in the back of me. Said, "You tell her to carry you across and I'll carry you the rest of the way." Well, the aunt came by and she said "What's the matter?" Sainday said, "Well I broke my leg and I ate it." Said, "You shouldn't have ate, eaten your own leg." He said, "But I was hungry and I had no other way of getting food." She said, "Well, where's your arms?" And he said, "I ate them too." And he said, "I'm here, have to cross the river to get back to my camp ground. And I don't know how to get back home," So she says, "Well, since you did that, your uncle is coming maybe he'll carry you across." Well, the uncle came by and he asked him. He said, "Uncle can you carry me across?" "I don't have no legs, my legs are broken." And he said, "How did you break them?" And he said, "Well, I was hungry and I jumped off a tree and ate them." Said, "Oh, my goodness! You weren't that hungry." Said, "Yes, I was." Said, "Well, where's your arms?" He said, "I ate them too." So nobody wanted to carry him across. And he saved one of his arms. He didn't eat the other arm. He had two arms but he ate one. And he saved the other one. He said, "I think I'll just barbecue this arm. And I'll put it on a long stick and I can turn it right round and round while I'm sitting on top of the tree while it cooks." He built a big fire so he could run automatically this wheel that he made before he ate his leg. And he piled lots of wood under there. And as they turn, you go ahead and turn the wheel, must turn. So he tied it up there while he was in the tree before he broke his arm. So it turned real good. So (background conversation, interruption) tree, he tied this barbecue frame that goes round and round, this wheel. But
