

So this White Sainday said, "Well. I'm not ready but I can." This

Indian Sainday said, "I'm not ready but I can get the best of you."

This white man says, "No you can't." Said, "I'll go real fast and go after my trick medicine if you loan me your horse. And your saddle, I could go faster. And loan me the bridle too." So he said, "And I could still go faster if I had your boots." Brand new pair of boots and spurs. So he goes and borrows the White guy loaned this Indian his horse, boots and saddle and bridle. So, and he start running and he got over two hills.

He got on the second hill. And he says, this Indian man says, "Hey, White man, I cheat you. I don't even have my medicine but I got your horse, your saddle. See, I'm more powerful than you are."

(Yeah, I remember that one. I like that one.)

Anyhow this man tried to beg him to come back.

(Conversation)

It's a little nursery rhyme. Little boy that are mean, well, they sing it to, the grandmother sings it to them. There's stories, when the boys are mean this guy comes from the mountain. He dresses like a gunny sack, "Bugger" man. He carried a gunny sack on his back. With a wire tied up he picks up little boys that are cry babies. And they, these parents got hold of this gunny sack and there was a little boy's arm in there had been roasted. That was all that was left of this crying little boy.

(You say that's a nursery rhyme?)

Yeah. He sings it.

(Could you get him to sing?)
