

Molly, but I wasn't born yet. He was out there. And while they are patrolling there were some Comanches came--three riders. They were up on a level plain. Tom Otterby was out there. Tom Otterby. He had a friend by the name--this name I'm talking about--One Feather, (Cheyenne word). He was a close friend. He was just like a brother to him. Like a brother to my father. He went along with my father and they joined up. That's when they seen these three Comanches. They seen them. They recognized them from quite a ways. They know how they're dress. They was going to be attacked. That one Comanche went this way. And one went this way. And the other one was coming this way. There were two Cheyenne--my father and this (Cheyenne word meaning "One Feather"). This One Feather, he went up to this fellow. When he went up to him, that Comanche killed him--this One Feather. He kill him right there. He thought he was going to get this fellow (the Comanche), but he got killed. My father went up to this other one, that come this way. He got him. And after he got him, why this fellow came on and attacked my father. When he came and attacked my father, my father, he got him. Yeah. My father got two of them--two Comanches. This other one took out when that happened. He escaped. All right. My father went after this (One Feather). He put him on his horse. He's already killed. He brought him in--back to the camp. Brought him back to his folks. This One Feather had a father and a mother. He's already dead. Laid him over his horse. And when they brought him in, why this One Feather's father and mother, they got my father for a son. Taking his place of One Feather--the one that got killed. That's how he came to acquire that name--One Feather (Cheyenne term meaning One Feather). And people, they know him as that. And this other one (another Cheyenne term)--that means "He's been-wounded." He's been knows as that. He had three names, but his original name, when he was a little baby born, was (Cheyenne term). That's how come he acquire that name, Good Man, at home.
