

(Mice?)

Mice, uh-huh. Little mice. This mice stuck his head out and saw an old tom cat sitting on the counter. Boy, he just jumped right back in that pocket and stayed in there! Scared to death. So he popped his head out again why this Indian gave him a little drink--little nip. Mice went down again. Well, second time he came up, give him another little drink. Third time he popped his head out why, give him another nip. He went down. In a little while he thought, "By golly, I'm as big as that tom cat." So he just jumped out on that counter. "Now where is that old tom cat?" So the Indian is kinda like that. They're shy, they're afraid to say anything. The first time you give them white lightning they ready to talk. All comes out. That way you will find out what he's thinking about.

(Quite a surprise sometime what they think about?)

Yes. That's right.

(Release their emotions, feelings.)

(End of Interview.)
