

Oklahoma. I want to keep that....We can keep it that way. We talk like that. Some of these leaders talk, talk. Some with character, they talk. We don't want it that way, us Indian people here. We don't want it. They pray every day. Some of the parents, they pray, hoping that some day our boys will come back and nobody knows when it's going to be--nobody. We believe in good way of life--good way. We must show one another what's good fellowship. Regardless of who it is, we must make them understand. That's the reason we're here. I'm here. With my own mind the way I think I talk that way. And I told the lady, we're down here. They show us the views of this university and I look. Good scenery. We look towards that river back over there. It's a good place. Good place where President Johnson--America beautiful--our country. I notice different places where I go. It's getting all right. People--their towns--they're cleaning up. That's what he said, Johnson. I notice they're changing things a whole lot. We still got our freedom. We can talk. We can say whatever we want to. We still got that. That's good.

(Dr. Berthrong, author of The Southern Cheyennes, comes in.)

COMMENTS ON HOW PAT HENNESSEY, A WHITE FREIGHTER, WAS KILLED

(Would you tell Dr. Berthrong your story about Pat Hennessey? You were telling about that freighter last night? I think he'd like to hear this.)

(Interruption)

Man-in-the-Clouds, he was blind. Kish Hawkins took care of him. After they got through with him. Then we sit down. So Kish, he asked me, "Where you been? How's everything up there?" I said, "Well, everything's all right." I told him, I said, "I been to a celebration at Hennessey." They called some Indians over there, you know, and they butcher a beef and they just send it down to them campers. They're going to have a parade that night--no--after the pageant. It was just a little ways from Hennessey, about a quarter of a mile northwest--back in there. So I went over there. I wanted to look at the pageant--just how it happened. When I said that to Kish, that I went to
