

street a white fellow run up. He jerked that war bonnet off of Joe Yellow Eyes and threwed in on the--and he took out. Old Joe took out after him, but he couldn't catch him. Joe came back and put his war bonnet on and he went on. It shows, the old time--you know--in a saloon, also. They had one boy by the name of Johnny Swallow. He was going to dance that night. He had his outfit on. Lots of people--I happened to look in. They had him in there. They had him on a big round table. Them people shooting blanks, you know, and hollering. They made that boy dance on that table there. Once in a while they hand him beer. That boy, he change his dance, you know. They was having rough time there. All right. That's what I told that old man. He said, "I heard that before. Now, things like that --that camp at Watonga--" They camped. Pan Hennessey was a man that was pretty rough. Mean. He'd kill an Indian whenever he sees one. But they was going to go after him from that camp. So I guess they had a crier went around--a crier--asking for volunteers. What they call "Dog Soldiers--" hotamitaniyo. That's a clan (Men's warrior society). We got some in that second war. There was a tipi up. They had four volunteers--young men. They volunteered. (They're^s going to go with these chiefs. There was three that's going to go on--the chiefs. They went in there. There's ceremonies they had to go through with that pipe. After they came out of there, they told them, "Prepare yourselves. Get your gun." That time they had that--some of them had them Winchesters. They told them to get good horses. Naturally in camp they had pretty horses there. This was before car days. Horses. One of them--one horse that the Cheyennes used to like--the best horse--they got spotted horses and all kinds of different horses, but that one horse, he was number one to the Cheyennes. When they go off like that--he's kind of like a buckskin--a buckskin horse. He had a stripe down here, down his back down to his tail. A black stripe. That's the best horse. So them volunteers, they give them four horses. They're ready. Prepared. They're going tomorrow morning. They're going to leave tomorrow. So they prepare. Early in the morning, before daylight, they started out. These
